It's a sunny day in the garden.
The WellieWishers are exploring.

Camille notices how tall the sunflower has grown. She notices something else, too.

“Hey, over here,” she calls to her friends. “Come look at these strange leaves!”

Kendall, Ashlyn, Emerson, and Willa run over.

“Those aren’t leaves,” Willa says.
“Those are chrysalises.
Caterpillars make chrysalises when it’s time to turn into butterflies.”

“Wait,” Emerson says. “You mean there are caterpillars in those chrysalises right now, but when they come out, they will be butterflies? No way!”

“Yes!” Willa says. “And see those colors on the bottom? Those mean it’s almost time for the butterflies to come out!”
