A Surprise for the Melowies

The Castle of Destiny changed at the beginning of every school year. The castle's silent corridors, high ceilings, and steep spiral staircases filled with laughter and friendship. The castle turned into a place where promising young Melowies came to search for their own destinies.

“Hey, girls! The first week of school is finally over!” cried Electra. She ran out of the science lab like a cyclone of red curls. “When do we start lessons in the Art of Powers? I can’t wait to learn how to use mine! In the Day Realm, Melowies make beams of light! I wouldn’t even know where to start.”

“Not yet,” said Cora, throwing cold water on Electra’s enthusiasm. “First we have to take our core lessons, which will be hard. I almost fell asleep in pegasus science today!”

“Me, too!” Electra said. “But that’s because I was too excited to sleep last night! Just think! We survived our first week at the Castle of Destiny! We made it!” She found a gap in the crowded corridor and skipped away.

Cora shook her head. “No one behaves like that in the Winter Realm.”

“Come on, Cora!” teased Cleo with a chuckle. “Do you always have to be Miss Icicles?”

Selena was so deep in her own thoughts that she passed right by her two friends.
